by products including Gadolinium-based MRI dyes, Seroquel®, Trasylo®, Ortho Evra® and Avandia. Howard Nations currently serves on the plaintiff steering committees in Gadolinium, Ortho Evra and Zyprexa MDL litigation. Such complex cases require a unique combination of legal, technical and scientific expertise. The Nations Firm uses a multidisciplinary approach by working closely with attorneys, physicians, nurses, computer graphics specialists and trial consultants to create the finest in legal, scientific and technical case presentation. The firm carefully chooses the claims it prosecutes so the trial teams have the requisite time and energy to swiftly move each case to settlement or trial.

In modern trials, computer-generated graphics are routine and often indispensable. Nations has been a pioneer in this area and continues to lead the way with his use of technology in litigation. In 1988, he was the first lawyer in the country to introduce a computer-generated animation into evidence at trial. Today, Nations remains on the cutting edge with digital demand letters, animations that bring the trial story to life and the development of computer-generated trial modules that put the entire trial at the attorney's fingertips.

"I am driven to make the best possible use of science and technology in the courtroom. My primary motivation is to make positive changes in the lives of my clients," Nations says. "The nature of our cases also allows us to aid in another major goal of the plaintiffs' bar, to make our country safer for American citizens and consumers."
